The Owner's AI Prompt Pack

20 copy-paste prompts that do a real job. Sales, ops, marketing, finance, strategy. Fill the blanks and run them today.

The Owner's AI Prompt Pack

20 copy-paste prompts your team can use today, grouped by the job they do. These aren't generic "AI tips." Each one does a real piece of work. Paste it into ChatGPT, Claude, Copilot, whatever you use, fill the blanks in [BRACKETS] with your actual details, and run it.

How to use this: every prompt has a one-line "why this matters" and a fill-in-the-blank slot so it's usable in the next two minutes. Start with the one closest to a problem you have right now.

Honest note: these prompts work today and they're yours to keep. The real leverage comes when this stuff runs automatically inside your business instead of someone copy-pasting it. That's the upgrade, not the prompts.

1. Sales and follow-up

The Same-Day Follow-Up

Closes deals you were about to lose to silence.

Act as a direct, human sales closer. Write a same-day follow-up message to a prospect I just sent a quote to. My offer is [OFFER] at [PRICE] for [CUSTOMER TYPE], and the main thing they're unsure about is [OBJECTION]. Keep it short, warm, and specific to what we discussed. Reference the value, not the price. End with one clear, low-friction next step. No fake urgency, no salesy fluff.

The Call-to-Next-Steps

Turns a messy call into a clean action list in 60 seconds.

Here is the transcript or my rough notes from a sales call: [PASTE NOTES]. Pull out what the prospect actually cares about, the objections they raised, and what they committed to. Write me a crisp recap email I can send today that summarizes what they told me in their words, restates the value, and proposes the next step. Then give me a 3-bullet internal note on how likely this is to close and why.

The Win-Back

Reactivates dormant customers you already paid to acquire.

Act as a retention strategist. I want to win back a customer who's gone quiet. They bought [PRODUCT] about [TIMEFRAME] ago and the reason they drifted is probably [REASON OR 'not sure']. Write me 3 short messages: one that re-opens with no ask, one that offers genuine new value, and one with a clear reason to come back now. Keep them human and specific, never desperate.

The Discovery–Call Opener

Gets a prospect talking about the real problem in the first 5 minutes.

Act as a consultative sales rep. I'm about to get on a first call with a [CUSTOMER TYPE] who reached out about [TOPIC]. Give me 7 questions, in order, that get them talking about the real problem and what it's costing them, not just what they think they want to buy. For each question, tell me what I'm listening for. End with the one question that surfaces budget without sounding like I'm asking about budget.

2. Operations

The SOP Cleaner

Turns tribal knowledge into something a new hire can follow.

Act as an operations manager. Here's how we do [PROCESS] today, in my own messy words: [DESCRIBE IT]. Turn it into a clean, numbered standard operating procedure with owners and quality checkpoints, written so a new hire could follow it without asking me a single question. Then flag the 3 steps most likely to break under volume and tell me how to bulletproof them.

The Contract Risk Reader

Spots the landmines before you sign, in plain English.

Act as a sharp operations advisor, not a lawyer. Read this vendor contract and tell me the risks in plain English: [PASTE CONTRACT]. Flag auto-renewals, price-escalation clauses, lock-in terms, anything that's hard to exit, and any obligation that's heavier than it looks. Rank them by how much they could cost or trap me, and tell me the 3 questions to ask before I sign.

The Job–Description Builder

Attracts the right person and repels tire-kickers.

Act as a recruiter. I need to hire a [ROLE] to take over [RESPONSIBILITIES]. Write a job description that attracts A-players and filters out the wrong fits, a 5-question application screen that tests for the one trait that actually matters in this role, and the green and red flags to listen for in interviews. Tell me the single most important quality to hire for here and why.

The Bottleneck Finder

Names the one constraint slowing your whole operation.

Act as an operations consultant. Here's how work flows through my business from first contact to delivery: [DESCRIBE THE STEPS]. Find the single biggest bottleneck, the step where work piles up or quality slips, and explain how you know it's the constraint and not just a busy spot. Then give me three ways to relieve it ranked by cost and speed, and tell me which one to do first if I only had this week.

3. Marketing

The One-Win-Into-Five-Posts

Turns a single customer result into a week of content.

Act as my content strategist. Here's a real win we had with a customer: [DESCRIBE THE RESULT]. Turn it into 5 short, plain-spoken social posts that prove we know our stuff without bragging. For each, give me a scroll-stopping hook, the core point, and a soft call to action. Tie it back to what we do naturally, no hard pitch. Tell me which one you'd lead with and why.

The Month of Subject Lines

Gets your emails opened instead of buried.

Act as an email marketer. My audience is [CUSTOMER TYPE] and my next month of emails is about [TOPICS]. Write me 20 subject lines spread across curiosity, benefit, story, and direct angles. Keep them honest, specific, and human, no clickbait that doesn't pay off. Then star the 5 you'd bet on and tell me why they'd get opened.

The Plain-English Rewrite

Makes a confusing service page actually convert.

Act as a clear-writing conversion copywriter. Here's my current service page or offer description: [PASTE IT]. Rewrite it in plain English a busy owner would actually read. Lead with the outcome, cut the jargon, and make it obvious who it's for and what to do next. Give me the rewrite plus a one-line note on what was killing the original.

4. Finance and admin

The Expense Categorizer

Turns a chaotic charge list into a clear picture fast.

Act as a meticulous bookkeeper. Here's a list of business expenses: [PASTE THE LIST WITH AMOUNTS]. Group them into clean categories, flag anything that looks like a duplicate, a forgotten subscription, or an unusually large charge, and total each category. Tell me the 3 categories growing fastest and the one place I'm most likely overspending without realizing it.

The Late-Payment Sequence

Gets invoices paid without you feeling awkward.

Act as a no-drama accounts-receivable manager. Write me a 3-message late-payment reminder sequence for an overdue invoice. Message 1 is a friendly nudge assuming it slipped, message 2 is firmer with a clear due date, message 3 is direct about next steps while keeping the relationship intact. Keep them professional, short, and easy to send. No threats, no groveling.

The Weekly Metrics Review

Gives you a CEO dashboard in plain language, every week.

Act as my finance analyst. Here are this week's numbers: revenue [REVENUE], leads [LEADS], close rate [RATE], cash on hand [CASH], and top costs [COSTS]. Tell me in plain English how the business is actually doing, what changed from a normal week, the one number trending the wrong way, and the single action I should take this week to improve it. Keep it to half a page.

5. Owner and strategy

The Devil's Advocate

Stops you from making an expensive mistake before you make it.

Act as a skeptical board member whose job is to stop me from wasting money. Here's my plan: [THE PLAN]. Attack it. Find the weakest assumptions, the costs I'm underestimating, the ways it fails, and the simpler alternative I'm ignoring. Be direct, not polite. If the plan survives, tell me the 3 conditions that have to hold for it to work and how I'd know early if it's going sideways.

The Priority Sorter

Cuts the noise down to the one move that matters this week.

Act as my chief of staff. Here's everything on my plate: [DUMP EVERY PROJECT AND OBLIGATION]. Sort it by impact on my main goal of [GOAL] versus effort. Tell me the 3 things to do now, what to schedule, what to delegate, and what to drop entirely. Be willing to tell me a project I'm attached to isn't worth it. End with the single highest-leverage move for this week.

The Pricing Pressure-Test

Tells you if you're leaving money on the table before a price change.

Act as a pricing strategist. I sell [OFFER] to [CUSTOMER TYPE] at [CURRENT PRICE]. Pressure-test it. Tell me whether I'm likely underpriced, the signals that say so, what a defensible higher price would be and why, and the real risks of raising it. Give me the one sentence I'd use to explain the new price to an existing customer without losing them.

6. Customer and retention

The Onboarding Tightener

Turns new buyers into people who actually stick.

Act as a customer-success lead. Here's what happens after someone buys [PRODUCT OR SERVICE] from me today: [DESCRIBE THE CURRENT ONBOARDING]. Redesign the first 14 days so the customer hits a real win fast and never feels lost. Give me the exact touchpoints, who or what sends each one, and the single moment most likely to make them stay or leave. Flag anything I'm currently doing that quietly kills momentum.

The Review Request That Works

Gets happy customers to actually leave the review.

Act as a reputation strategist. I want more honest reviews from happy [CUSTOMER TYPE] customers. Write me a short, genuine request I can send right after a customer hits a win, the timing rule for when to send it, and two follow-up nudges that don't nag. Make it easy to say yes to and specific to [PRODUCT OR SERVICE]. No incentives that would make the review feel bought.

The Churn Autopsy

Tells you why customers really leave so you can stop the bleed.

Act as a retention analyst. Here are the last several customers who left and what I know about each: [PASTE WHAT YOU KNOW]. Find the pattern, the real reason behind the stated reason, and tell me whether it's a product problem, an onboarding problem, or a fit problem. Give me the one change most likely to keep the next at-risk customer, and a single question I should ask every customer before they're tempted to leave.

One more thing.

These give your team a head start. If you'd rather have these running on their own, follow-ups firing without anyone remembering, reports building themselves, that's the system I build and run as your Fractional AI Officer. Start with a free Scope Call.
