

The Owner's AI Prompt Pack

20 copy-paste prompts your team can use today, sorted by the job they do: sales, ops, marketing, and admin. Not generic 'ChatGPT tips' — each one does a real job. Fill in the violet blanks and run it in ChatGPT, Claude, Gemini, or Copilot.

$300 value · your price: $0

How to use these: copy a prompt, paste it into your AI tool, and replace the [violet brackets] with your real details. The more specific you are, the better the output. Start with the one prompt that maps to a problem you have this week.

● Sales & Follow-Up

Close the deals you're already losing to slow follow-up.

01 The Same-Day Follow-Up

Why this matters: Recovers quotes that go cold because nobody followed up in time.

Act as my sales follow-up writer. I sent a quote to [customer/company] for [product or service] at [price]. It's been [number] days with no reply. Write me a short, friendly follow-up that adds one new reason to move forward, references something specific about their situation, and ends with a single easy next step. Keep it under 120 words and human, not salesy.

02 The Call-to-Next-Steps Translator

Why this matters: Turns a messy sales call into a clean action list so nothing slips.

Act as my sales operations assistant. Here's the transcript or my rough notes from a sales call: [paste notes]. Pull out exactly what the customer wants, their objections, what I promised, and the next step. Then write me a recap email I can send them today that confirms next steps and keeps the deal moving.

03 The Dormant-Customer Win-Back

Why this matters: Reopens revenue from customers who quietly stopped buying.

Act as a retention copywriter. I have a past customer, [name/company], who bought [product/service] but hasn't ordered in [timeframe]. Write me a warm win-back message that doesn't sound desperate, reminds them of the result they got, and gives them one specific reason to come back now. Give me a text version and an email version.

04 The Objection Pre-Empter

Why this matters: Handles the deal-killer before the prospect ever says it.

Act as a sales strategist. My offer is [offer] at [price] and the objection that kills most of my deals is [objection]. Write me three ways to address that objection before the prospect raises it, plus one clean line I can use live on a call when they bring it up anyway.

05 The Proposal Tightener

Why this matters: Makes your proposal read like a clear yes, not a confusing maybe.

Act as a proposal editor. Here's my current proposal or quote: [paste it]. Rewrite it so the outcome and the price are crystal clear in the first ten seconds, cut anything that creates hesitation, and add a short 'what happens next' section so the buyer knows exactly how to say yes.

● Operations

Turn the chaos in your business into clean, repeatable systems.

06 The SOP Builder

Why this matters: Turns a process living only in your head into a checklist anyone can run.

Act as an operations consultant. Here's a process in my business, described messily: [describe how something gets done]. Turn it into a clean, numbered SOP with each step, who owns it, what 'done' looks like, and the common mistakes to avoid. Format it so a new hire could follow it without asking me a single question.

07 The Contract Risk Reader

Why this matters: Surfaces the buried clauses that cost you later.

Act as a contracts analyst (not legal advice). Here's a vendor or client contract: [paste it]. List the top five things I should worry about, in plain English: auto-renewals, price increases, cancellation terms, liability, and anything unusual. Tell me which clauses I should push back on before signing.

08 The Job-Description Drafter

Why this matters: Writes a real job post from a plain list of tasks in minutes.

Act as a hiring manager. I need to hire someone to handle [list the tasks and responsibilities]. Write me a clear job description with the role title, the outcomes they own, the day-to-day, must-have skills, and nice-to-haves. Keep it honest and specific so I attract people who can actually do the work.

09 The Workflow Mapper

Why this matters: Exposes the slow, manual step that's choking your delivery.

Act as a systems analyst. My core workflow is [describe how a lead becomes a paying, delivered customer]. Map it step by step, flag every point where work waits on a person or gets done by hand, and tell me which single step, if automated or removed, would speed up the whole thing most.

10 The Vendor Comparison

Why this matters: Cuts through sales pitches to the decision that actually fits you.

Act as a procurement advisor. I'm choosing between these tools/vendors for [the job to be done]: [list options and prices]. Build me a comparison on the criteria that actually matter for a business my size, flag hidden costs, and give me a clear recommendation with the reasoning, not a fence-sit.

● Marketing

Turn one win or idea into a month of content that sells.

11 The Win-to-Content Engine

Why this matters: Turns a single customer result into a week of posts.

Act as my content strategist. Here's a real customer win: [describe what happened and the result]. Turn it into five social posts that build trust without bragging: one story post, one lesson post, one behind-the-scenes, one myth-buster, and one soft call-to-action. Plain language, no corporate filler.

12 The Subject-Line Machine

Why this matters: Gives you a month of email openers worth opening.

Act as an email copywriter. My audience is [target customer] and my emails are about [topic/offer]. Write me 30 subject lines, mixed across curiosity, benefit, and direct styles, all under 50 characters, none clickbait. Mark the five you'd bet on and tell me why.

13 The Plain-English Rewriter

Why this matters: Fixes the confusing service page that's quietly losing you buyers.

Act as a conversion copywriter. Here's my current service or product page: [paste it]. Rewrite it in plain English so a busy owner gets what I do, who it's for, and why it's worth it within ten seconds. Lead with the outcome, cut the jargon, and end with one clear call to action.

14 The Hook Factory

Why this matters: Solves the real reason your content gets scrolled past.

Act as a viral content strategist. My topic is [topic] and my audience is [target customer]. Write me 15 scroll-stopping hooks, in plain language, no hype, that would make my ideal customer stop and read. Mix curiosity, contrarian takes, and direct value. Mark the three strongest.

15 The Repurposer

Why this matters: Multiplies one long piece into a week of content for free.

Act as a content repurposing engine. Here's a long piece I already made: [paste a blog, transcript, or long post]. Pull out the five strongest standalone ideas and turn each into a short post for [platform], keeping my voice. Then give me one email and one carousel outline from the same material.

● Finance & Admin

Stop the small leaks and the late-paying customers.

16 The Expense Categorizer

Why this matters: Turns a messy expense dump into a clear spending picture fast.

Act as a bookkeeping assistant. Here's a list of my business expenses with amounts: [\[paste the list\]](#). Group them into clear categories, flag anything that looks like a duplicate, an unused subscription, or an unusually large charge, and tell me the three categories where I'm spending the most.

17 The Late-Payment Sequence

Why this matters: Collects overdue invoices without you having the awkward conversation.

Act as an accounts-receivable specialist. I have a customer, [\[name\]](#), who is [\[number\]](#) days late on a [\[amount\]](#) invoice. Write me a three-message reminder sequence (friendly, firm, final) that stays professional, keeps the relationship intact, and makes it easy for them to pay. Give me email and text versions of each.

18 The Weekly Metrics Review

Why this matters: Builds the simple scoreboard you never have time to make.

Act as my finance analyst. My business is [\[what you do\]](#) and the numbers I care about are [\[revenue, leads, close rate, cash, or whatever matters\]](#). Design me a simple weekly review: the five numbers to track, where each comes from, what 'good' and 'bad' look like, and three questions to ask myself every Monday.

19 The Cash-Flow Forecaster

Why this matters: Tells you what's coming so payroll is never a surprise.

Act as a financial planner for a small business. Here are my numbers: monthly revenue [\[revenue\]](#), main recurring costs [\[costs\]](#), cash on hand [\[amount\]](#), and any big bills coming up [\[list them\]](#). Project my cash position for the next three months, flag any month that gets tight, and tell me the two things I should do now to protect it.

20 The Renewal Killer

Why this matters: Stops silent auto-renewals from draining money all year.

Act as a subscription auditor. Here is every recurring charge hitting my business card, with renewal dates if I have them: [\[paste the list\]](#). Flag which ones likely overlap, which look unused, and which renew soon, then give me a simple keep/cut/downgrade recommendation for each and the total I'd save by acting.

These prompts solve today. The system is the upgrade.

A prompt does one job once. A built AI system does it every time, automatically, while you sleep. If you want me to wire these into infrastructure that runs your follow-up, ops, and reporting on autopilot, start with a free Scope Call.

Book a free Scope Call →

<https://synapseapi.adovadigital.com/widget/booking/00umViqpLPgQAKyKN90o>